What HORSES Can Teach Us about providing
HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES

That's right, HORSES! Horses are prey animals whose survival is dependent upon their keen ability to read and respond to non-verbal communication. They are also 100% authentic.

HorsePlay provides real-time trainings for providers of Human Services and Health Care.

Like some people, horses are prone to anxiety, are non-verbal and have their own moods and personalities. Horses will form bonds with humans when they feel safe and understood, with their boundaries respected.

Your group, class or team will build skills with this unique and powerful model.
60 - 90 minute workshops held March through November.

There is no riding involved and no horse experience is required.

"The beauty, and fun, of this work" says Nichols, "is how honestly horses respond to human behaviors - and how much information that provides. They also allow us to try and try again - and without judgement."
